

By Kelly Hushin
Photography by lyamila.com and Mark Treon

rwanda reborn

A rainforest retreat that's not just for the birds

When the nearest airport is a half day's drive and all that surrounds the site is a rainforest full of rare gorillas, birds, and plant life, all of which must remain unscathed, building a 5-Star hotel is a challenge, to say the least. Add to its remote location the fact that Nyungwe Forest Lodge is part of Rwanda's effort to turn its reputation right side up from a history marred with a tragic genocide in 1994, and the true scope of this project comes into focus.

"The greatest difficulty is changing people's perception of Rwanda prior to experiencing the country and the people first hand," says Mark Treon, project architect with Cape Town-based

Above: The exterior of Nyungwe Forest Lodge. Below: Red upholstered chairs provide pops of color in the otherwise neutral Tea Lounge. Opposite page: Traditional African patterns line the walls of the Gallery.

Above: A modern silhouette sets Nyungwe apart from typical lodges. Below: Natural materials abound in the cozy dining room. Opposite page, from top: Tufted leather chairs and paper pendant lamps in the function room; infinity poolside dining.

M2K Architecture, which worked on the project with partner company Keith Interior Design, as both firms were founded by Keith Mehner. “Once in Rwanda, the warmth of the people and their desire to welcome others and share their country quickly changes any misconceptions.”

Situated on a working tea plantation that hugs the rainforest’s edge in the Nyungwe National Park area, the two firms conceived and built the 24-room hotel (including two suites) as a window into the surrounding rainforest with utmost respect for nature and the native culture. “The guest accommodations are really at the forest edge so you’re right there with the monkeys and birds,” says Mehner. The lodge’s buildings consist of two types: those in the middle of the plantation, made of a solid construction with stone walls to recreate an extension of the solid earth, and those sitting near the forest, which have lighter footprints, perched on wooden stilts and surrounded by native plants to simulate an extension of the forest.

“We looked at the local patterns and customs and traditions of how the Rwandan people make things and copied those patterns into the carpets and other design elements,” says Mehner. They also used local materials and artisans’ work throughout: clay tiles handmade by the river, stone that was shaved on-site, and traditional imigongo panels made of cow dung by local women. The team was conscious, however, of keeping the design contemporary as they did not want it to look colonial or like a game lodge. Pops of bright red and irreverent elements like a chandelier made of tea balls spice up the neutral black, white, and tan palette. “We wanted it to be different but rooted in that area,” notes Mehner. hd

www.keith.co.za; www.nyungweforestlodge.com

Above and opposite page: In Guest Villas, guests can bathe, sleep, or entertain with nonstop views of the surrounding rainforest. Below: Objects like this tree-trunk table are an elegant way to bring the outdoors in.

Nyungwe Forest Lodge

Gisakura Tea Plantation, Rwanda

Owner and Operator Mantis Group

Architecture Firm M2K Architecture, Cape Town

Architecture Project Team Keith Mehner, director; Mark Treon, project architect; Mercia Erwee, senior architectural technologist; and Christina Marsden, architectural technologist

Interior Design Firm Keith Interior Design, Cape Town

Interior Design Project Keith Mehner, director; Ian Hannay-Robertson, director; and Michael Dolbow, interior designer

Contractors ROKO Construction Limited (main building, back-of-house buildings, infrastructure, and roads); T&B Log Homes (guest accommodations); Thomas & Piron (pool and pool buildings); and Earthquest Management

Purchasing Firm Groenhof McCann Procurement

Lighting Consultant QDP Lighting and Electrical Design

Civil and Structural Engineering ASCH Consulting Engineers

Mechanical and Electrical Engineering WSP Consulting Engineers

Landscape OvP Associates

Environmental Consultant Chand Environmental Consultants

Quantity Surveyor Davis Langdon

TEA LOUNGE

Chairs Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Benchmark Joinery

Sofa Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Wunders

Chair and Sofa Fabric Tessa Sonik

Coffee Table/Side Tables/Log Baskets Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Jurgen Schirmacher & Associates

Upholstered Cubes Wunders

Cube Fabric Wolfe Street Fabrics

Carpet Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Rugalia

Turned Wood Tables Weylandts

Central Seating Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by David Morgaas and Sons

Central Seating Fabric Home Fabrics and Wolfe Street Fabrics

Painted Stool Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Mila

Stool Fabric Wolfe Street Fabrics

Lighting Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Ikhaya Design

Fireplace Artwork Rwanda-Art

GUEST VILLA

Tub Libra Bathrooms

Faucets Newform XT

Baskets Rwanda-Art

Chaise Lounge Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Benchmark Joinery

Chaise Fabric Tessa Sonik

Minibar Unit Designed by Keith Interior Design; manufactured by Mila